Chief Steward Quiets Refugees on Endangered Ship.

Lights Pipe With Steady Hand and Tells Passengers There Is No Danger-Rict Would Have Doomed Vessel.

This is a story of a white lie, which was told in the White sea. It was told by the chief steward of a White Star liner, says the Montreal Star.

During the evacuation of the Murmansk coast, when tens of thousands of refugees and troops were being taken away from north Russia to scape the bolshevik firing squads, one of the liners, a new White Star vessel, was blown onto a reef close inshore with a thousand troops and 1,500 refugees on board. It happened at eleven o'clock at night, and until 4 a. m. the ship pounded on the reef, tearing her bottom plates to pieces, also making considerable water in all her holds.

The captain held a final consultation in his cabin, himself, the chief engineer, purser, chief steward and other department heads being present. The captain stated coldly that in his own opinion when the ship got off the reef. with the rising tide, she would take water in so quickly that it would simply be a nose dive into deep water.

The chief steward then reported that every man, woman and child on the ship wore a life belt, even the ba-He also stated that he had the passengers fairly well in hand. "Well," said the captain, "we may as well make preparations for the worst.

"If she takes water the way I think she will, it will simply be a case of every man for himself."

chief steward left the captain's cabin and stood at the top of the stairs above the upper deck. Two thousand pairs of eyes were peering up at him to read the fate of the ship and themselves. Chief Steward Robinson did not wilt. They went and the was a new vessel and her patent on she was forced to dock at Cromarty, a naval base in the north of Scotland, and this was safely managed. All the passengers, mostly mayors of Russian towns and their dependents, were landed without mishap. Had a riot occurred on hoard ship the ship's staff could never have handled her in the skillful way which Robinson, with his pipe in hand, had told the biggest lie in his life, but it was a white one and did the trick.

He stated afterward that the reason his hand did not shake was for two and a half years he had slept abourd ship above ammunition cargoes and had become quite fatalist in the presence of supreme danger.

Yes, She Had Seen It.

The new typist determined to make a good impression upon her chief. She turned up half an hour early and began tidying up the room. When that was done she examined her typewriter, discovered it in a shocking condition, found a bottle and gave it a thorough oiling. While about it she examined all the other typewriters in the office and oiled them too.

There is nothing, she thought, like making oneself indispensable! Her chief arrived. He looked around him with an air of satisfaction and crossed to the mantelpiece. Then his smile changed to a frown.
